FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

EnglishOnline.Net to Offer Business Courses to College Students in 2001-02.

Boca Raton, FL. EnglishOnline.Net will have its Business and Technical writing courses offered through Tarrant County College in Fort Worth, Texas beginning in the fall of this year. The courses will be featured in TCC's Continuing Education catalog for the fall semester, and TCC plans to offer the courses for credit in spring, 2002.

Robert Tillett, co-founder and site administrator for the online venture, says that he and his partners all hold master's degrees in English and Writing and have been teaching for ten years or more. "These courses are online, intensive versions of courses we developed and taught at the university level, so the quality is there."

The courses feature web-based lesson activities, personal feedback and instruction from qualified instructors, and interaction with other students and instructors via an online forum.

A Trend That Will Continue — "Many continuing education students are older professionals with full schedules already," says Tillett, "so the flexibility of an intensive online course makes perfect sense."

Tillett also points out that with the ever-increasing cost of development and unpredictable advancements in technology, it is more cost-effective for schools to outsource some of their online offerings. EnglishOnline.Net has been offering online lessons and courses since 1998.
